A Gentleman Cabman.

Frederick Wickett and his son, Bob, were boon companions. They belonged to the same clubs, played billiards and golf together, and on one occasion—the father was a widower—made love to the same woman. But there was no rivalry in the matter, for neither knew of the other's attentions and neither's intentions were serious. When they became aware of the fact, they had a good laugh over it.

But the day came when a girl came between the Wicketts. She did not move in their exclusive circle, for she made her own living. Her family had been wealthy, but that was before her time. Wickett senior forbade the bans. The couple were married, and the father and son became as strangers. There was nothing to do but for young Mrs. Wickett to retain her position. Bob had no knowledge of and was not fitted for business. He tried several subordinate positions and failed at them all. At last he grew desperate and resolved on some congenial work, no matter how humble. He was very fond of horses, and a livery stable keeper offered him the post of assistant manager. He accepted it. "I can't go with the swells any more," he said, "so it doesn't make much difference what I do."

Despite the difference between the position of a liveryman and a society man Bob found his work endurable. Had it not been for this difference he would have found it to his taste. As it was, he was in constant terror of being recognized by some of his former associates.

Meanwhile Frederick Wickett was having a dull time of it without his chum son. Arrived at an age when new intimacies are hard to make, he pined for companionship. He would have married, but congenial marriages are as difficult to make to order as friendships. All he could do was to spend the most of his time driving, automobiling or at his club, but at neither did he find those with whom he could obtain enjoyment.

One day Bob Wickett had a run of bad luck. While all the drivers were out there was a telephone call from a lady, one of the best customers of the stable, for a carriage to drive her to catch a train. Bob was directed to do the job. When returning from the station he saw on the sidewalk one of his old friends approaching. He drew his coat collar up about his chin and pulled his hat down over his eyes. In this way, though the former friend looked straight at him, Bob passed unrecognized.

Scarcely had he escaped one mortification than he fell into another. Hearing a sharp "Hey!" on the sidewalk, he drew rein and turned his head. There stood his father.

"Free for awhile?" asked Mr. Wickett.

Bob was about to say "No" when it occurred to him that his father would recognize his voice. He said nothing, but, quickly turning his face to his horses, pulled up to the curb. "Athenaemi club," said Mr. Wickett senior, stepping into the carriage. Bob experienced a singular sensation at having his father inside to drive whither he liked. Various plans passed through his head, but none got a foothold. He thought of driving to his humble apartments to show his father how miserably he lived, hoping to touch his heart, but he feared it would rather offend his pride. He reached the club without having hit upon anything feasible. His father alighted, took out his pocketbook and handed up the fare. His eyes met Bob's, and he recognized him.

The two men stood looking at each other without speaking. There was a strange expression in the father's eyes. Many a time they had been driven together. Many a time one or the other had handed the fare to a coachman. The father thought of this and more. He saw his boy mounting his pony. He saw him later, in fashionable attire, astride his horse in the park, admirable alike for his handsome face and figure and horsemanship. Then he went back to the beginning and saw the babe in his mother's arms.

"Come in and get something warm," said the father, in the tone he would address a coachman.

Bob left his horses standing in the street and followed his father into the visitors' room in the club. The father kept the bearing of a gentleman to his coachman; the son maintained a coachman's reserve. "Waiter, a pint of champagne."

The waiter, though astonished at such a call for a coachman, was too well trained to show his surprise. He disappeared, and when he returned the gentleman was striding back and forth, while the cabby was standing as befitting his grade, with his whip in his hand. The waiter opened the wine, poured out a single glass, not supposing for a moment that the gentleman would honor a cabman by drinking with him. Then he left the room. Ten minutes later the waiter saw Mr. Wickett leave the club with the coachman, get into the cab and speed away. Entering the visitors' room, he noticed two empty glasses standing together. Up to that moment he always had supposed Mr. Wickett to be a real gentleman. But a few evenings later, when Mr. Wickett had a couple for dinner in the ladies' annex, and in the young husband in evening dress—including white silk waistcoat with gold buttons—he recognized the cabman with whom Mr. Wickett had drunk, he dropped a soup tureen and was reprimanded for his carelessness.

WHAT IS WRONG?

Many Ask People in Astoria Are Asking That Question of Late.

Within the last few weeks, more people than usual have complained of frequent sneezing fits, tickling in the throat, stoppage in the nose, spasms of coughing, raising of mucous, droppings in the throat and offensive breath, and have asked themselves what is the matter.

The trouble is that they are affected with catarrh, and unless immediate steps are taken to remedy their condition, the disease will increase and spread through the delicate mucous membrane that lines the air passages, and a chronic and serious stage of the disease will result.

At the first symptoms of catarrh, Hyomei should be used. There is no other treatment like it or just as good; none than can take its place and cure so surely, so quickly and at so little cost. It is a scientific medicated air treatment that does not drug and derange the stomach, but is breathed in, directly destroying all disease germs that may lurk in the nose, throat and lungs and soothing and healing the irritated mucous membrane.

T. F. Laurin, the local agent for Hyomei, has so much confidence in the merits of the remedy that he offers it on trial to any catarrhal sufferer with the agreement to refund the purchase price of $1.00 for the complete outfit to anyone who is not satisfied with the results. You certainly can afford to test Hyomei with an offer like this. Get it now and be cured of catarrh.

From Fort Stevens—

ARCHITECTS BANQUET.

Pleasant Compliment Paid to American Architects.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—Architecture should be studied for general culture and not so much a technical education subject was the opinion of Prof. Percy H. Nobbs of McGill University, who spoke last night at the forty first annual banquet of the American Institute of Architects.

"As a Canadian I feel that we owe an enormous architectural debt to you American architects," said he. "However, we would appreciate it if you would pay a little more attention to ethnographic condition than you do in your architecture."

Frank M. Day of Philadelphia, was toastmaster. The banquet closed a four days' session of the Institute.

Cured of Bright's Disease.

Mr. Robert O. Burke, Elmore, N. Y., writes: "Before I started to use Foley's Kidney Cure I had to get up from 12 to 20 times a night, and I was all bloated up with dropsy and my eyesight was so impaired I could scarcely see one of my family across the room. I had given up hope of living, when a friend recommended Foley's Kidney Cure. One 50 cent bottle worked wonders and before I had taken the third bottle the dropsy had gone, as well as all other symptoms of Bright's disease." T. F. Laurin, Owl Drug Store.
